When Axel Gets in Shape to Battle
Jack Johnson Should Worry"J. C." SHOT GRACE
IF ANYBODY DID,
SAID ACCUSED WIFE

Mother of Wounded Man Declares at Trial the Prisoner Made the Remark.

ATLANTA, Ga., July 30.—How Mrs. Daisy Grace, on trial here accused of having attempted to kill her husband, once declared that if anybody had shot Grace, it was "J. C.," a negro butler, was recited on the stand today by Mrs. S. L. Hill, Grace's mother.

Mrs. Grace arrived at the Hill home in Newnan, Ga., testified Mrs. Hill, and was informed that Grace had been shot in his home in Atlanta.

"After I told of the shooting," testified Mrs. Hill, "Daisy said she did not believe it. I told Daisy that I was afraid Gene had accidentally shot himself."

"If any one shot Gene," she said Mrs. Grace declared, "it was J. C. (the negro butler). Yesterday he nearly beat Martha to death, and Gene told him if he touched her again he would wear his cage out on him."

SAID GRACE SHOULD HAVE HIS LIFE INSURED.

Mrs. Hill said Daisy asked her where Eugene had been shot. Through the jury, she replied, "When later she told Daisy that Eugene was still alive and had been taken to the hospital, Mrs. Hill said Daisy inquired as to the proximity of the lungs and the heart, and remarked that she did not know anybody who had been shot through the heart could live."

Asked as to whether Mrs. Grace had ever spoken about insurance, the witness said Mrs. Grace remarked in November, 1911, that "She thought Gene should have his life insured for her protection." Near month, Mrs. Hill said, "her daughter told her that Grace had had his life insured."

The witness was asked: "Why didn't you tell during your preliminary examination what you have just said about Mrs. Grace's remark concerning the proximity of the heart and lungs?"

"I was excited at the time and did not remember."

The prosecution apparently attached some weight to a statement made by Mrs. Hill that Mrs. Grace had offered to lend her a black dress, which she had brought with her in her suit case. The defense objected to the admission of this statement.

"We expect to show," said Solicitor Dorsey, "that Mrs. Grace went to Newnan with a black dress, so that if the information there before Friday, the day she was to return, that Grace was dead, she would have a mourning gown."

Grace, who is a pathetic figure at the trial here of his wife, whom he charges with shooting him, declares he is in fear of being killed. He has appealed to city detectives for protection in the court room. "I don't trust that woman, and I fear her friends still more," he is quoted as saying.

Despite the sight of Grace lying on a cot paralyzed and a physical wreck, his vengeful eyes seldom leaving the face of the woman he accuses, public opinion is with Mrs. Grace. The defendant does not appear to be worrying over the outcome of the trial. But she does not seem to avoid the baleful gaze of her husband.

Opening of court was delayed and when Judge Roan finally mounted the bench he ordered an hour's recess so that members of Grace's family, who were delayed by a late train in coming from the family home at Newnan, Ga., might be present. The heat in the little court room was intense. Two hundred people jammed every seat, and were packed in the aisles. Two-thirds were women, who literally fought for points of vantage. The ventilation was almost inoperative and counsel on both sides protested against crowding of the room, fearing interruption of the trial by fainting women.

GRACE ON COT IS WEDGED IN ELEVATOR.

Grace spent the night at a private sanitarium and was taken to the court room early. Mrs. Grace was among the first persons in the court room, arriving before the doors were opened to the spectators. She took the same seat she occupied yesterday, but pushed the chair back further from the place where her husband's cot lay, evidently desirous of avoiding his eyes.

When the hour's recess was up there was still another delay. Grace had been carried on a stretcher into the elevator, and the lift wedged between floors on its upward trip to the fourth floor, where court is being held. Nearly half an hour elapsed before the cage could be repaired.

The stock market, although exceedingly dull, assumed a strong aspect today. There were a few sales during the morning hours, which sent the prices up and down for a while, but by noon trading had practically ceased. The leading issues closed strong, most of them making up for yesterday's losses.
